

Legislative Priorities Connecticut General Assembly 2022 Regular Session

"My dear friends: Your vote is precious, almost sacred. It is the most powerful nonviolent tool we have to create a more perfect union." – Congressman John Lewis (February 21, 1940—July 17, 2020)

As states across the country attempt to roll back voting rights and protections, Connecticut must lead the way in protecting and expanding voting freedoms. But as the Center for Public Integrity observed in 2020, Connecticut has among the most restrictive voting laws outside of the south. Black, Brown, and other communities of color in Connecticut routinely face long lines and other obstacles when voting. It's past time we remove these barriers and ensure that all voters are free from voter suppression and intimidation.

1. Ban Foreign Spending on State Ballot Referendums to close a huge loophole in state law that currently allows foreign individuals and entities to spend foreign funds to influence the outcome of our state and local ballot referendums.

The question on Connecticut's November 8, 2022 statewide ballot where voters will decide if our state will finally allow Early Voting could become a target of anti-democratic foreign actors.

The General Assembly needs to enact a specific law to prohibit contributions or expenditures by foreign nationals or entities on ballot measures in Connecticut.

Connecticut General Statutes Sec. 9-620c now sets the following limit: "A political committee formed solely to aid or promote the success or defeat of a referendum question shall not receive contributions from a national committee or from a committee of a candidate for federal or out-of-state office." But it is silent on funds from foreign sources.

2. A Connecticut Voting Rights Act to give Black, Brown and other voters of color additional protections against voter suppression.

Connecticut has a record of voter suppression: we were the first state in the country to enact a racially discriminatory literacy test for voting and among the last states in which literacy tests were still in use in the 1950s.

To this day, Black, Brown and other voters of color in Connecticut routinely encounter long lines and other obstacles when voting. In 2020, the Center for Public Integrity observed that Connecticut voters still "face some of the biggest obstacles outside of the south."

3. A Ranked Choice Voting (RCV) Bill to create a task force to study the implementation of RCV for state, federal and municipal elections in Connecticut.

In a typical election, voters cast ballots for one candidate, and the candidate with the most votes wins, even if a majority prefer other candidates. With Ranked Choice Voting, voters rank candidates in the order they prefer them, marking the ballot for their 1st choice, and if they wish, for their 2nd and 3rd choices, and so on.

A candidate wins if they receive a majority of first-choice votes, just the same as a plurality election. If no candidate gets more than 50% of first-choice votes, the last-place candidate is eliminated, and the second choices of that candidate's voters are transferred to the remaining candidates. This process continues until one candidate receives more than 50% of the vote.
